Septorhinoplasty or “Nose Job”

What is a “Rhinoplasty” or “Septorhinoplasty”?

These terms are often used interchangeably, although technically “Septo” means that the nasal septum (the cartilage partition in the nose) has to be corrected as part of the procedure. In actual fact, in many cases, the septum must be dealt with in order to achieve a desirable result and so the two terms become almost synonymous. In essence there are two goals in any Septorhinoplasty:

1. To make the nose look better
2. To ensure proper function (i.e. improve or maintain nasal breathing)

For the ideal result, a surgeon will therefore bear both of these aims in mind and be trained in treating not only cosmetic problems, but also other nasal diseases. This is the task facing a Rhinologist, who specialises in all of these aspects of nasal surgery.

For details on how the surgery is done and what is involved, please check the “Procedures” section of this site.
